"Biggest Bank—Littlest Town"

"Speaking of banks; we have recently heard that Hyde Park, the home of Senator Page, carries the honorable distinction of having the largest bank in the world for a village of its size.

"Such an exceptional thing is distinctive and it is worthy of mention. To us it has not been known until now that such distinction has come to Vermont.

"Of course it did not come to this State and neighborhood without reason. In fact it came through hard work, good management, careful and honest dealing. In brief, it attained that distinction by 'pluck, perseverance, persistence—and printer's ink.'—Burlington Daily News.

Thanks to the News for the very pleasant compliments extended to Lamoille county. We think the report that the News, says, it has recently heard that "Hyde Park, the home of Senator Page, carries the honorable distinction of 'having the largest bank in the world for a village of its size,' is unquestionably correct.

If anybody is curious enough to take the time to investigate the matter and finds that it is not true, we will make our humble apologies.

What strikes us in the above statement of the News, as being particularly pertinent and happy is that it has diagnosed so correctly what we think are the true reasons why Hyde Park enjoys this unique distinction.

As a rule, things don't come in this world unless there is a reason for their coming. The farmer who has the best dairy of cows is the one who is everlastingly vigilant to see that his cows are well bred and have good care.

The best lawyer is usually the one who has been the most diligent, painstaking and persistent in studying the underlying principles of law.

The News is unquestionably right when it says that the growth of the Hyde Park Bank came through hard work, good management and careful and honest dealing. We doubt if any man ever gave to a financial institution more vigilant, painstaking, tireless attention than have its managers given to the Hyde Park Bank.

Their motto from the beginning has been "Absolute safety first." High rates of interest have never tempted them to accept a weak loan. In other words, they have deserved the confidence of the people of Vermont, and the people of Vermont have, on their part, reciprocated that confidence by making the Hyde Park Bank the depository of their savings.

Four per cent, with taxes of every kind paid—and that is what the Hyde Park Bank pays—is as high as a bank can afford to pay if it confines its investments to strictly first-class paper and makes "Absolute safety first" its motto.

The fact that it is perfectly safe now to send money by registered letter, check, or postal money order, has resulted in deposits coming to the Hyde Park Bank from every county and almost every town in the state, and from almost every state in the Union.

If anyone would like to know more about the Hyde Park Bank, they will receive prompt information by addressing the President, Carroll S. Page, or the Treasurer, F. M. Culver, Hyde Park, Vermont.—News and Citizen.

The Bank has recently issued a very handsome booklet telling of its growth during the first 25 years of its existence. It contains a photograph of the President, Directors and Treasurer, and, until the issue is exhausted, will be sent free, postpaid, to anyone asking therefor, and saying that they saw this notice in the Essex County Herald.

Nothing better for constipation, sour, distended stomach, bad breath or biliousness. Stops headaches quickly. For sale by John W. Thurston.

WAYS OF PRESSING FLOWERS

Whether in Country May With Little Trouble Secure Some Interesting Specimens.

The visitor to the country who likes to press flowers can find no better pressing agent than sheets of newspaper put under heavy blocks. Cut the newspapers into sheets of conveniently small size, and make a pad of half a dozen of them to put under the flowers, and another to put over them. Then pile several heavy books over them.

Change the newspaper pads two, three or four times when the flowers are first pressed, as the paper absorbs the moisture from the flowers and should be changed for dry paper.

As soon as the flowers are thoroughly dried, they can be mounted on sheets of stiff paper or thin cardboard. The best way to mount them is to cut narrow strips of court plaster or piece-partout binding and to paste the flowers securely to the cardboard or paper by pasting the strips over the stems.

Flowers and leaves are the most permanent when pressed. They do not fade to any perceptible degree for many months. White does not fade, of course, but it turns brown, and red fades rapidly. Blue fades, too, and lavender and purple combine the best of blue and red.

DARWIN ON MAN'S ORIGIN

Misconception Which Has Been Widely Prevalent Set Right by English Curator.

"It is popularly supposed, even today, that, according to Darwin, man is a descendant of the monkeys," writes W. P. Pyecraft, curator of the British Museum, in the Illustrated London News. "But let those who feel hurt at the idea console themselves with the fact that he said nothing of the kind. What he did say was that man and the apes were descendants of a common stock, which is a very different thing.

"Huxley, years ago, endeavored to set this misconception right in his delightful 'Man's Place in Nature,' yet so deeply rooted was the original idea that he failed to reassure the non-scientific readers of his time. His son relates how his father, near the end of his life, saw Carlyle walking slowly and alone down the opposite side of the street and, touched by his solitary appearance, crossed over and spoke to him. The old man looked at him, and merely remarking, 'You're Huxley, aren't you, the man that says we are all descended from monkeys?' went on his way, giving Huxley no chance of explaining matters or of protesting against the imaginary sin of his old friend being thrust upon his shoulders. A more careful, less prejudiced, perusal of what Huxley said would have set the old man's mind at rest and spared him this unmanly response to a kindly greeting.

"Huxley was the first, in that wonderful book, to marshal the facts of man's descent in detail. He pointed out the striking resemblances between man and the higher apes, and especially the chimpanzee and the gorilla. And the mass of facts which has accumulated since he wrote has confirmed that comparison in every detail."

GAVE HIM THE RIGHT IDEA

Important Part Played by Woman's Thimble in Showing Inventor Where He Could Improve.

Some of the greatest inventions in the world have been the result of accident, other inventions might have proved worthless had not some simple device, perhaps of an unimportant bit of machinery, made the whole failure a success after all.

Not many people know that a woman's worn-out thimble played an important part in our modern illuminating gas jet.

When Murdock, the inventor, first used his gas on trial he let it escape from the end of a small pipe, sticking on a clay plug when he wanted to shut it off. One day when he wanted to shut off his flow in a hurry he could not find his plug and being fearful of an explosion hastily searched for some substitute, finally grabbing his wife's thimble. This he closed over the pipe, but the thimble being perforated by constant use the gas perched from the small needle holes and to his amazement the inventor says that the spread flame due to the numerous openings gave a better light than the solid flame from the pipe. So the thimble was the ancestor of the modern burner, according to a narrator of the episode in Gas Logic.

All "Mr. Browns"

Some twenty to thirty fishermen were engaged in an angling contest on the Severn, when one of them, who had brought with him a stone gallon bottle of beer, suddenly bethought himself of a friend who was sitting some distance along the bank out of sight. In a moment of generosity he called a boy and handed him the jar, with instructions to take it to his friend, Mr. Brown, and to tell him "to have a pull." The boy departed and some time elapsed before his return. The angler seized his bottle and eagerly raised it to his lips—to find it empty. He had not realized that his friend had such a cubic capacity, and asked the lad if he had found Mr. Brown, and why the jar was empty. "Please, sir," came the reply, "they was all Mr. Browns when I asked, so I went along the bank till the beer was finished."—London Mail.

His Alphabetical Family.

Assistant City Prosecutor Souhrada of Chicago, in explaining his late attendance in court told the judge that "the stork supplied the letter 'D' to my alphabetical family this morning."

"How's that?" asked the court.

"Well, we've got all the letters up to 'H' now. 'D' was missing, so we named the new arrival Daniel. He's as fine a boy as you ever saw."

He named his children over for the judge. They are: Albert, Bernadetta, Charles, Daniel, Elsie, Frank, George and Helen.

"When will Z be represented?" asked the court.

"I give it up," laughed the prosecutor.

Morning.

Something happened about him and behind him; something he had written about a hundred times and read about a thousand; something he had never seen in his life. It flung faintly across the broad foliage a wan and pearly light far more mysterious than the lost moonshine. It seemed to enter through all the doors and windows of the woodland, pale and silent but confident; like men that keep a trust; soon its white robes had threads of gold and scarlet; and the name of it was morning. — From "The Flying Inn," by Gilbert K. Chesterton.
